

Explore and understand what matters most to you, and discover what careers and vocations are options for you.

Focus on your coursework

Your primary vocation during college is being a student, so do it as well as possible.

Explore majors and careers

See what might best fit your aptitudes and interests by taking our recommended career assessment, YouScience. Get to know your professors, too.

Create your profile

Create your LinkedIn profile and join KingsConnect, the College's alumni and student network.

Draft a college resume

Use our resume templates.

Interview upperclassmen, alumni, and family friends

Do informational interviews with upperclassmen to discover what's possible—from leadership opportunities to internships for credit—throughout your college career. Also, do at least 3 informational interviews with alumni or family friends to explore possible career paths.

Plan your summer

While at King's, you'll probably want to intern during the school year in NYC. So we recommend taking a class—either online or abroad—to free up some course time in later semesters. If you plan on working during the summer, we recommend working in your hometown; don't worry about where you work/intern—just having some work experience will help you as you pursue future options.

Research your study and internship abroad options

International experience is looked favorably upon by employers, and some programs even combine study with work placement. Check out, for example, GOINGLOBAL.

Reflect on your experiences

You'll change a lot in college, as you learn more about your interests, aptitudes, and personality, so reflect on your experiences. Use these questions to guide you.
